

Developing effective practice

Making the most of the employability area of the Teaching and Learning website

What is it?

This area of the Teaching and Learning website provides a resource base designed to support providers wishing to help learners progress successfully to a job, a further course or self-employment.

The site provides links to resources that support the development of learners' employability skills. The resources have mostly been developed in the Teaching and Learning Programme, some in specific curriculum areas. Providers will find them valuable for use in other subjects and across the curriculum.

How to use it

There are two areas to explore via the home page. Guidance is given on how resources might be used.

Embedding employability in teaching and learning

- Using this resource
- Getting to grips with employability
- Assessing employability
- Recommended links

Skills and qualities, knowledge and understanding

- Working together
- Thinking and solving problems
- Understanding the business
- Using language effectively
- Using numbers effectively
- Using information technology
- Self management and development

More about the content

Information, guidance and relevant links are also provided under the headings:

- Employability skills and this resource
- What do I need to do now?
- Getting to grips with employability
- Employer engagement
- A whole organisation approach to employability and work related training
- Guidance on professional development
- Assessing employability
- How can progress and achievement be recognised in work-related learning?
- Technical information
- Recommended links